

Leading with Trust

* inspire, influence and motivate *

Trust-based leadership is an irresistible, positive force. Trusted leaders and organizations do things better, faster, and at lower cost. In The Speed of Trust; the One Thing that Changes Everything, Stephen Covey outlines the importance of trust for every business relationship. Without trust, the cost of doing business is high.

Our ability to engender trust is a key advantage in our relationships as leaders.

Join Amanda Madorno and her herd of horses and learn how to leverage the power of trust within your team. After working with the horses, you'll leave with the tools, techniques and insights required to put you and your team on the road to increased productivity through increased trust.

Dates – August 25 – 26, 2011; 9 am – 5 pm each day

horses as trust teachers

Working with horses helps increase our understanding of how we come across as leaders and whether or not we are trusted. Horses only respond to people they trust. They have the ability to read our emotions that are below the surface.

benefits & results

This workshop strengthens your ability to combine personal responsibility for trusting relationships with compassion and respect for others. You will be able to:

- Understand and utilize proven processes for establishing, increasing, growing, and restoring trust
- Identify and learn how to remove obstacles that block the cultivation of trust
- Recognize and respect the personal boundaries of others
